trip in about ten days. During the storm Monday night lightning killed a cow belonging to Mrs. Bauerkemper who lives near the city. The lightning ap-parently run along a barbed wire fence near which the cow was lying. C. J. Swan has fitted up a first-class bakery at 213 Main street, and will open the same on or about June 12th. The baker who was employed by the firm prior to dissolution will continue in the employ of Mr. Swan. Every effort will be made to meet the wants of the public.

The young republicans will meet at th republican headquarters to-night to perfect an organization which shall do active service during the coming campaign. Young men who will cast their first presidential vote this fall are earnestly invited to turn out and organize. A flambeau and drill brigade will be features of the organization.

The Manawa notel was closed yesterday owing to the discontinuance of trains on the motor line, and all of the help was paid off and discharged. All attempts to continue business at the lake have been abandoned, and everything is as quiet there as during the winter. The work of fitting up the new athletic park has been stopped and Manawa at the present time is literally dead. It has all been brought about by the shortsighted policy of the Milwaukee officials, and the citizens announce their intention of paying the road in its own coin in the future.

Until further notice the Manawa motor line will leave the Rock Island tracks at 9, 10 and 11 o'clock a. m.; at 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 o'clock p. m. and at 7, 8, 9 and 10 o'clock p. m.

The Unruly Ones. Two drunks, John Leahy and George Stevens, were mulcted to the tune of $7.60 each in police court yesterday morning. Will Almy and John McAuley were arraigned for disturbing the peace, and their cases were continued. Eight vags were gathered in from the freight yards in the southern part of the city. They had been making their home in a freight car on the "Y" between the Wabash and Burlington tracks, and the railroad officials complained of the nuisance. As the patrol wagon approached one of the number jumped from the car and made a dash for liberty, but he was caught fast in a barb wire fence, and before he could extri-cate himself Officer Cusick had him in the toils. Chief Lucas' revolver was thrust into the car, and the remaining seven tumbled over each other in their haste to get into the

"hoodlum carryall."

They were stored away in the cooler, and will be given an opportunity this morning to rehearse their pedigrees and explain the circumstances attending their visit to the pro-

Giving the Citizens a Chance to Show Their Enterprise.

AN INDIGNANT PAPA'S ANGER

He Whips His Daughter For Thinking of Marrying-A Lively Tussle With a Burglar-Points and Personals.

Testing Men.

Yesterday two sets of committees were canvassing to secure the needed subscriptions o firmly secure two of the most important enterprises which the city is now arranging for, one being the grand $250,000 hotel, the other the $100,000 Chautauqua assembly. One who has not been engaged in the almost thankless task of interested citizens in what is really for their interests can not realize the approvances and discouragements attendant upon such a canvass. Some of those called upon realize quickly that this is a critical period in the history of Council Bluffs. They appreciate the fact that unless all lift, and lift together, and according to their individual strength, two at least of the grandest enterprises ever started in any city will be lost. Such realize that Council Bluffs by gaining these two enterprises alone, in addi-tion to the other enterprises already secured, will enter at once upon such a growth and prosperity as was not even dreamed a few months ago. Those thus realizing that this is a vital turning point in the city's history, are doing their best to have the point turned in the direction of success. Such gladly welcome the committees, and somount up the committees and hand in their subscriptions.

The aggravating and discouraging feature of the work is the inequality in giving. To have a man who has thousands of dollars of property here twist and wiggle, squirm and beg off, and finally decide to think the mat ter over, or else refuse outright to give any-thing on account of being hard up, or to at last sign for $50 when he ought to make it $500, is discouraging. Perhaps the next one is some young man, with small interests here, who, with a smile, puts down $50, giv ing it cheerfully, when in fact he sees no such chance to get his money back as does the man who has much real estate. There are a goodly number of citizens, who, when they consider the property which will be advanced by these enterprises, ought to hid their faces in shame to have the subscription lists looked over.

Then there are some who seem to forge Then there are some who seem to forget that these committees are putting in their time, as well as money, for the general good. They act as though these gentlemen were asking some personal favor. It takes indeed a variety of people to make a city, and the record is an interesting one. If these enterprises are crippied or lest by reason of preparation or single. or lost by reason of procrastination or sting ness of those who are able to help but won't they will perhaps see their mistake when they hug their possessions so closely, and wonder why the city doesn't grow, why nobody wants to buy any of their property.

These subscription lists are moving along so well that it seems both the hotel and Chautauqua will be secured. But little is now lacking, and it is not to be believed that this little will be allowed to prevent the onward movement. If there is any such failure, which is hardly deemed possible now, it will be due to the fact that those who could help have so discouraged those otherwise willing as to prevent them frem giving the finish to enter-prises from which all will reap great benefit. The hotel matter will be decided once and for all to-day, and it is believed that the success hoped for will be secured beyond any chance for a defeat.

Didn't Want a Son-in-Law.

A young fellow of about twenty-two years appeared at police headquarters yesterday morning and swore out a warrant for the ar rest of James Williams for beating and other wise abusing and maltreating his daughter. The story he told was to the effect that the daughter, Stella Williams, a girl of sixteen summers, was engaged to marry him, but her father objected, as he wished the girl to marry someone else and when she announced her intention of marrying the man of her snake" whip and belabored her over the head and shoulders until her dress was cut in sev and shoulders until her dress was cut in several places, and the blood flowed from gashes in her delicate skin. The girl showed a slit in the arm of her dress and a cut upon her shoulder, and a warrant was issued for the arrest of the alleged brutal parent.

A BEE reporter, wishing to hear the other side of the story, visited the home of the girl at the corner of Broadway and Sixteenth street, and asked Mr. Williams what he had to say in regard to the matter. The visitor was asked to seat himself and the father was asked to seat himself and the father gave the following account of the affair, and the circumstances that led to it:

"About a year ago a young man by the name of Frank Henness began to go with my daughter Stella, who at that time was barely fifteen years of age. He was not the kind of a fellow to suit me for a son-in-law, as he was in the habit of running bills that he could not pay, and was discharged by a railroad company because his wages had to be garnisheed. My principal objections were on account of the youth of the girl, as I did not wish her to have any regular company until she arrived at a suitable age. How-ever, she was bound to go with him and used to meet him at the residence of a brother of Herness', who lives at the corner of Sixth avenue and Twenty-first street. Finally she wanted to go there to do housework, but her wanted to go there to do housework, but her mother objected, as it would occasion unfavorable comment among the neighbors. Seeing that she was determined in the matter, I at length told her that if she must go with the fellow, she could have him come to the house, as a man ought to, and not go running about the country after him. That did not make any difference, as he was probably afraid to come here. Things went on in this way until last Sunday noon, when she told her mother she was going to call on a young friend of hers, and going to call on a young friend of hers, and would be back in the evening. She did not come back until Monday noon. Her mother had been out to work, and I had to get dinner for myself and the little ones, after doing my had been out to work, and I had to get dinner for myself and the little ones, after doing my forenoon's work. She was accompanied by Mrs. Ed Henness, and each was wheeling a baby, which was something she never would do for her mother. She said she was going home with Mrs. Henness, and I told her she should do nothing of the kind, and shut the door and pushed her away from it. She began to get ready, and I told her that she was a big girl to have to be punished, but if she tried to go I should whip her. I pushed her away from the door again, and she struck at me and called to Mrs. Henness to come in and help her. I insist that my children must mind me, and I picked up a whip to punish her. I intended to strike her around the corset to scare her more than hurt her, but the lash struck her con the arm and cut her a little. That was something I did not mean to do and no one could be more sorry than I was. She left the house the next morning and has not been back since. Henness got out a warrant for me and the officer served it. The trial comes off to-morrow morning."

The reporter suggested that the pair were propably married, as they had amounced their intention at the police station of going propably married, as they had announced their intention at the police station of going to Omaha for that purpose in the afternoon, and the father said he would rather have them do so than live as they had been doing.

A Battle With a Burglar. Yesterday morning Richard Green, living at 142 Park avenue, had a thrilling experience with a burglar. About 3 o'clock he arose and passed into another room to see what time it was. Both rooms are situated upon the second floor, and when he was approaching the clock he was startled to see a man standing near the head of the stairs. Without stopping to consider results he pursued the necturnal visitor, who fled past him sued the necturnal visitor, who fied past him down stairs. Here Green evertook his visitor and threw him upon the fleer. In the tussie the graciline stove was overturned and the kitchen utensils scattered about the room. The hurried chase and fall of the those a work the girl, but she, was slow in fieding matches, and before the fellow could be secured he had slipped from Mr. Green's hands and fied through a convenient open window. Mr. Green instantly turned in a police alarm, to which there was as immediate response, but the barglar and all trace of him had disappeared.

He left abundant evidence of his visit as the following notice from Mr. Green will show: "I had a somewhat hurried interview with a gentleman in my house about 3 o'clock Wednesday morning. During the course of the rather animated exercises that ensued he left his hat and a collar button which I shall be glad to return if he will call and prove property and pay for this notice."

RICHARD GREEN,

142 Park avenue In the morning it developed that the house of Mr. T. E. Cavin, situated near that of Mr. Green had been entered during the night. Every room, closet and possible hiding place of valuables was ransacked, with no result save general disorder, for nothing of value was taken.

A Balky Railroad.

The result of the pig headed obstinacy of the Milwaukee officials is now apparent, and the citizens of Council Bluffs can swallow their disappointment at the new turn affairs have taken as best they can. Mr. Reed, the owner of the motor line, has come to the onclusion that he can no longer conduct his cusiness in the present manner, and yesterbusiness in the present manner, and yester-day gave orders to discontinue all trains. There is not travel enough over the line to warrant the expense of running it, as the majority of the citizens are opposed to walk-ing to the Milwaukee crossing to board the motor cars. All of the other roads have signed contracts to allow the road to cross, but the Milwaukee officials positively re-fused to sign such a contract as the others had signed, and that company alone is responsible for the action of Manager Reed. It is freely intimated that a few scheming citizens who desire to get possession of the motor line are at the bottom of the matter, and are endeavoring to secure that end through the successful use of the railroad company as a cat's paw. Mr. Reed says he has lost money in trying to run the road under the present circumstances, and will not continue to do so. He is positive that the ine would pay if the cars could be run to

THIS IS A OUEER RACE.

Fuegan Women Reaching a Certain Age Are Roasted and Eaten.

Profs. Lee and Townsend are both more than ordinarily successful as amateur photographers, says the San Francisco Examiner. They have brought back a fine collection of photographs of interesting places, people and situa-tions, some of which are reproduced here. By far the most interesting pic-tures are those taken off the coast of Terra del Fuego, the inhabitants of which are next to the lowest type of the human race known.

Prof. Lee, by the way, ascribes a different origin to the name of the land than is given in the geographies that were studied in the schools. These text books said that the number of volcanoes about gave the country its forbidding name, but the professor says that there are no volcanoes anywhere about there. The natives of the country live in long bark canoes, in the center of which a fire is always burning. When to kindle a fire meant to rub two sticks together until they started to burn, the savages were careful not to let their fires go out, and the custom The name comes from the survives. ver-burning fires.

The natives have learned the use of matches and tobacco, and these commodities command a high price in Terra del Fuego, even though there is no protective tariff there. A sheep or a baby is considered a fair equivalent for a plug of tobacco or a bunch of matches. If the choice of the price is given the native he will always give the baby, as there is a much greater demand for sheep than for young Fuegans.
It was reported that in one of the copper tanks, among the strange fishes, a good specimen of the Fuegan baby was comfortably tucked away in alcohol, but he scientists would not admit this.

The Fuegans are not a warlike race hough they are very skilful with their primitive bows and arrows. The arrows are not featured, and the barb consists of a triangular piece o glass ground sharp.

Though the Fuegans are very low in the human scale, they are careful not to offend the eyes of strangers. An explorer approaching a boat sees only the best-looking squaw of the party. She handles a paddle at the stern and steers the boat. Her less comely sister---there are always two families on a boat--is hidden ignominiously under the seat.

There are no old women in Terra del Fuego. Lest this should cause an ex-odus from the civilized world, it would perhaps be best to explain why. When a woman gets to the right age, about forty-five, she is considered to have done her duty. With apprapriate cere-monies, therefore, she is either lanced or strangled, and the family larder is replenished with her roasted remains. The women, when they see the time of sacrifice approaching, never attempt to escape it. They regard it as about almost as a settled fact that the wind should blow, and never trouble themselves about it. The Fuegans are not cannibals further than this. They never eat children, young women or men.

The Chinese Stage. In the first place, says a writer in The Chicago Herald, it is no easy matter to determine who of those upon the stage are supposed to be visible and who are not. There are men dressed like ordinary coolies whose duty it is, flitting hither and thither, to place chairs or properties and to remove them, to change the large labels hanging on the walls which announce "This is a wood" or "This is a palace," to arrange a set of curtains, when required, on bamboo rods, which drop into sockets at the back of the chairs, whereby a window is indicated, or a bed or doorway. These servants are conventionally understood to be invisible.

It being conceded that there is no attempt at actual illusion and that a heavy tax is to be placed upon the imaginative faculties, one is tempted to wonder why special costumes should not also be dispensed with. Where are we to draw the line? If a label is to do instead of scenery, why should uot a ticket hanging from a button announce that the wearer is a prince, minister or simple citizen? The Chinese carry the principle of convention bewilderingly far. A set code of attitudes and movements are understood by a pigtailed audience to indicate certain things. Thus the raising of one leg and a half turn (vaguely sug-gesting the act of getting into the sad-dle), implies that the character is on horseback; a crescendo of gong beating and a quick walk around the stage informs the spectators that the performers have moved to another place—what place is told on the changed label on the

Just as the star actor is supplied with light from the wings of flies by means of the lime light, so is the Chinese and Japanese premier subject followed bya candle. Preposterous and funny as it may seem, close to the hero or heroine there crouches on the boards, clad in the ordinary dress of the streets, attendant who grasps a red lacquered stick, some long, like a fishing rod, at the end of which, stuck in sconce, is a candle and a common every day candle at that; an evil smelling, guttering thing with a paper wick, which constantly needs snuffing, and supplies as much light as a glow-worm.

This he holds up to illuminate (?) the actor's features, and should the latter stride rapidly across the stage his "gas man" follows at his heels holding the candle at a convenient distance. True to the Chinese custom this person is conventially invisible (or posed to be), and his presence and un-gainly movements in nowise shock the audience. When the light of his master's life expires the dutiful link boy extinguishes his "illuminator" and departs, as the business of both is over. In a scene of great movement it is inexpressibly comic to see four or five excited personages strutting across the stage in an excited manner, each followed by his "boy, fishing rod and can-dle," and it is a common thing to see them collide with one another and extinguish "his" light. Nor is this all. The actor's dresser likewise appears with him; invisible, of course, and it is his duty to rearrange the attire of the actor should it become disarranged.

Mummies Made to Order.

A gentleman who has just returned from an extended foreign tour was asked recently why he had not brought home from Egypt, among other curios, a mummy. He said there was a great deal of fraud in the mummy business. Persons purchasing mummies, of course like to get them as well preserved and natural-looking as possible, and as those found are generally in a more or less dilapidated condition, vendors have engaged in the business of manufacturing bogus mummies. They bargain with tramps, beggars and such people for their defunct carcasses, paying therefor a sum sufficient to make their remainiug days short and sweet. These fellows are preserved and pickled and then smoked till they are good imitations of smoked fill they are good initiations of the genuine mummy. Whole rows of these articles can be seen in smoke-houses at once. When sufficiently dry they are wrapped in mummy cloth and sold, to Americans chiefly, bringing a
